The focus of the workshop is the development of your personal style and will commence with individual consultations using your most recent work as a beginning point. There will be slide lectures and a demonstration in the middle of the week. The workshop will have models available for two days. Bring materials that you want to work with - they can be oils, water-based paints or drawing materials. The workshop will also include some group critiques.

A versatile artist known for his sensitive portraits in watercolor, Powers' painting style has evolved into personal, content-dominated imagery. Using gouache, charcoal, pastel and sometimes collage on illustration board, his loose realism combines an emphasis on drawing with a awareness of the art of our time. He travels and teaches workshops in this country and abroad and is the author of Painting People in Watercolor, A Design Approach, published by Watson-Guption.
